Working with the Executive: Tips from the Top

The Executive can be a group to fear if you are managing people change, or at least a pain in the @#$%^ (especially the CFO). Rather than butt heads let's get to know the enemy and seek to understand.

As a past CFO of BHP Billiton Iron Ore, Stewart Hart has seen considerable change while working in a commercially focussed organisation. No doubt he has asked the tough questions of the change managers he has come across (some of whom we believe survived). This is now our opportunity to put some tough questions back to the CFO including;

- How to get the Executive onside with the people side of change?
- What does the Executive want, and need, to hear?
- Why is the CFO such a stick in the mud?

This is intended to be a discussion orientated presentation. Stewart looks forward to the change managers of Perth engaging in this discussion as we seek to understand the balance between commerciality and people. If nothing else we will have some fun!
